This is a comment about Open Internet/Net Neutrality. I could not find how to add this comment online. Obviously, I am against allowing communication providers to control internet access.

What can be good about making internet access like dealing with the phone company or cable providers? That doesn't help innovation. That adds monopoly companies to the mix. They already control my access to the net. Those communication companies are terribly customer unfriendly.

This sounds like corporate welfare for giants like Comcast, AT&T, or Verizon. What happened to 'draining the swamp'?

Sincerely,
